Putting it all on the line

ALLISON LAMPE | DAILY EGYPTIAN

Shirts decorated with messages against abuse are displayed Monday outside Faner Hall as part of the Clothesline Project, sponsored by the Women's Center in observance of Domestic Violence Awareness Month. Survivors of abuse and the loved ones of those lost to violence design the shirts to honor those affected and help victims with the healing process. Each color represents a different form of abuse: white in honor of those who have died, yellow for domestic violence, red, pink and orange for sexual assault, blue and green for child abuse or incest and purple for those attacked based on sexual orientation. The Women's Center in Carbondale and other area women's centers will be conducting activities for the entire month of October.

Presidential search takes off; committee, partnership formed

ELIZABETH ZINCHUK
Daily Egyptian

The search begins as the SIU Board of Trustees puts in place measures to aid in picking the new university president.

The Board of Trustees' Executive Board approved a partnership with R. William Funk and Associates Wednesday. The firm specializes in consulting and searches for higher education institutions, according to their website, and has assisted with searches for a president or chancellor at institutions such as Bradley University, Indiana State, and Purdue University in the last several years.

In addition to R. William Funk and Associates, 20 people were chosen to serve on the Presidential Search Advisory Committee who will assist in the search. The group is made up of faculty, staff, students and community members from both Carbondale and Edwardsville campuses. Trustee Donna Manering is the committee chair and Trustee Shirley Portwood will serve as the Board's liaison.

President Glenn Poshard said although he can have no role in deciding the new president, he is there to help advise or consult with the chairman when need be.

Poshard said everything is going well with the search thus far.

"The governing board is organizing the search very well," Poshard said. "They chose constituencies on both campuses which is how it is supposed to go."

Usually, Poshard said a search like this takes a year, which he said would not be the case with SIU's new president.

"They are predicting a new president will be chosen by early spring which is pretty impressive," Poshard said.

A survey concerning the presidential search was sent to students, faculty and staff via email, asking questions regarding qualifications of a new president, what challenges and opportunities SIU will face in the future and what recommendations should be paid attention to in selecting a new president.

The deadline to complete the survey is Oct. 11 and only allows faculty, staff, and students above the age of 18 to participate.

The Board of Trustees and Applied Research Consultants, an organization composed of graduate students and faculty members housed within the Psychology Department, are conducting the research survey.

Inclusive Excellence names new director

CHARINDER THOMPSON

Progression is one thing SIU has made a priority when it involves the student community in spreading diversity.

In recent years, the university has seen changes considered beneficial to the student body: one of which was the establishment of The Center for Inclusive Excellence. The center was founded summer 2012 in an effort to unite several student programs such as the Hispanic Resource Center, Black Resource Center and Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual, Transgender and Questioning Resource Center.

Nathan Stephens was named the Director of the Center for Inclusive Excellence on Oct. 1.

Stephen's goal as the new director is to not only shed light on diversity within the student community, but to unite the student body as well.

To me, this campus is about being purposely inclusive versus politically correct," Stephens said. "I am being mindful of all groups."

At the University of Missouri in Columbia, Stephens got his start with administrative positions and organized multiple student programs, some of which he focused solely on the African American student population.

Some of Stephen's significant contributions to the University of Missouri's campus were becoming the senior coordinator of the Oldham Black Culture Center and creating MIZZOU Black Men's Initiative.

Obama administration backs use of race in college admissions

MICHAEL MUSKAL
Los Angeles Times

In the wake of a recent Supreme Court ruling that narrowed but did not do away with affirmative action in college admissions, the Obama administration has reaffirmed its commitment to using race as a factor in college admissions to help increase campus diversity.

In a letter to college and university presidents, the departments of Education and Justice reminded educators that the Supreme Court in June ruled that race could still be used as a factor in admissions, as long as the race-based policies were necessary to achieve diversity.

In its 7-1 decision in Fisher vs. University of Texas, the court held that race could be used if "no workable race-neutral alternatives would produce the educational benefits of diversity."

Civil rights advocates and many university officials were relieved that the high court continued to allow race to be used in considering admissions, while opponents argued there was still enough ground for further suits to challenge such policies.

The use of affirmative action has divided Americans since the 1970s. In college admissions, supporters have used such policies to give opportunities to qualified minority students to help them overcome the effects of long-term discrimination. Opponents have contended that affirmative action is really reverse discrimination. The Obama administration has supported the use of race to help improve diversity.

"The Departments of Education and Justice strongly support diversity in higher education. Racially diverse educational environments help to prepare students to succeed in our increasingly diverse nation. The future workforce of America must be able to transcend the boundaries of race, language and culture as our economy becomes more globally interconnected," the letter sent to educators said.

The letter goes on to say that the 2011 policies on voluntary use of race in admissions remain available and the agencies "stand ready to support colleges and universities in pursuing a racially and ethnically diverse student body in a lawful manner. We look forward to working with you on this important goal."

The letter was signed by Catherine Lhamon, the Education Department's assistant secretary in the Office for Civil Rights, and Jocelyn Samuels, the Justice Department's acting assistant attorney general in the Civil Rights Division.

In the Texas case, Abigail Fisher, a white woman who was not offered a spot at the university's Austin campus, asked the courts in 2008 to look at whether the school had misused the racial criteria for making such admissions decisions. The Supreme Court did not deal with the broader question of whether race should be a factor but asked a lower appeals court to look at Fisher's case again.

Fisher has since received her undergraduate degree from Louisiana State University.

Non-visa immigrants to apply for Illinois driver’s licenses

JORDAN VANDEVEER
Daily Egyptian

Immigrants in Illinois without a visa will be eligible to apply for temporary driver’s licenses next month.

Governor Pat Quinn signed the Public Act in January this year and the law will go into effect this November.

Illinois is not the first state to pass this law, but the Illinois Secretary of State’s Executive Inspector General Nathan Maddox said Illinois will be the first large state, the first centrally located state and the first state at the crossroads of the nation’s transportation system to issue driver’s licenses to undocumented immigrants.

This driver’s license is not the first one of its kind in Illinois, but this new type broadens who is eligible for the temporary visitor’s driver’s license, which allows those without a visa to obtain one.

The term on the application is non-visa status immigrant, which was a compromise after many complained about the term “undocumented immigrant.”

Some commenters wanted the term deleted. They also wanted there to be no difference in applying for a temporary license with or without a visa. But, Maddox said removing the differences could not happen because applying for a temporary visitor’s driver’s license is different than how a person applies for a standard driver’s license.

There are special eligibility requirements for the new applicants, so it needs to be treated differently in the application process, he said. There has also been a suggestion to refer to the undocumented immigrants as A-5 applicants, from a reference in the new section of the Vehicle Code, but that idea was rejected because most people do not have knowledge of the reference.

Maddox said there were general observations and complaints from the public saying the Secretary of State treats applicants for the new driver’s

“I wonder how many of them will feel confident enough and feel like the benefits of having the driver’s license outweigh the risk of being identified by the government in terms of unlawful presence.”

— Cindy Galway Buys
law professor

license differently. He said the Secretary of State recognizes the differences, but those differences will continue after the new rulemaking.

One reason for the differences is because the requirements for the undocumented immigrants to get a driver’s license are different than all other driver’s licenses. Maddox said those include applicants’ proof they have lived in Illinois for one year and provide a valid, unexpired passport or consular ID card from their native country.

If the undocumented person says he or she has lived in Illinois for the last 12 months, that person must show proof of residency. The original proposal said if a person did not own their residence, they would need to list their landlords name and number. This suggestion was thrown out because commenters feared that would create too much power for a landlord to have over its tenants, which could cause abuse of the tenants. Also, some landlords may be unaware of a person living on their residence if that person lives with family or friends, or the landlord may not know the tenant is an undocumented immigrant.

Also, applicants do not have any verified federal identification information. Before the law becomes active, all drivers’ license holders have to either have federally issued social security card number or federally issued immigration documentation. He said the differences in the procedures for the undocumented immigrant driver’s license are to make up for the lack of federal identification.

Cindy Galway Buys, a Professor of Law at SIU and the director of International Law Programs, said the temporary licenses say you need to get insurance.

“I think a lot of undocumented immigrants were driving already,” Buys said.

She said the law is recognition of the reality that these people are here and they are already driving on our roads, and without having a license, they cannot get insurance.

Buys said giving the undocumented immigrants a driver’s license is a good thing because it helps protect American citizens, because if they are in an accident together, prior to this law, the undocumented immigrant would not have insurance to cover the cost of an accident.

Maddox said because of the state’s size and location, the program will be targeted significantly by organized criminal activities that are designed to fraudulently get the temporary visitor’s driver’s licenses for those who do not live in Illinois.

“Because of concerns about possible criminal activity involving individuals fraudulently obtaining identification documents, the Secretary of State’s Inspector General’s office has been actively involved in the design and implementation of this program,” Maddox said in an email.

Maddox said the best way they can look for fraud is the most basic way: they check for repeated passport numbers, license plate numbers, addresses, and vehicles that are used to take the road test.

The Secretary of State does not know for sure how many undocumented immigrants live in Illinois, but they are estimating between 250,000 and 500,000, possibly more. Of those immigrants, they do not know how many are of driving age or how many will apply for this license. However, they estimate around 100,000 will apply for the license.

Maddox said even if only one-tenth of the estimated number show up to apply for their license on the first day, November 28, the crowd will be unmanageable.

He said not only will they wait in lines that stretch for blocks, many of them will not get waited on, and regular customers will also have to wait in this line.

To help with the expected crowd, the Secretary of State has identified 25 facilities that have the physical layout to accommodate extra counters, testing areas, et cetera. They have also identified 10 more facilities they can use if it is necessary.

The Secretary of State will decide how many applicants these additional facilities can handle, and they will make online and call-in appointments for those facilities. It is estimated that the facilities can accommodate 100,000 applicants per year. Maddox said people may want everyone to have their license within six months, but that would mean when it is time for renewal, they would have a six month block very busy again. The renewal process will happen every three years with these licenses, and the Secretary of State has not decided if they will issue renewal notifications.

Carbondale is listed on the Secretary of State’s website as a location where undocumented immigrants can apply for their temporary visitor’s driver’s license.

Another change from the original documents was that undocumented immigrants were supposed to show proof they could not get a social security number by talking to the Social Security Administration. This requirement was thrown out, because it would require applicants to contact a federal government agency and identify themselves as undocumented immigrants.

The Secretary of State had to consider exemptions from photos for those that it violates their religious beliefs. The law did not originally have an exemption, but Maddox said since other licenses allow exemptions, this new type will as well.

However, this exemption interferes with one of the ways the Secretary of State plans to fight fraud, their face recognition system. The face recognition system compares millions of pictures in the states database, which compares things such as the length from pupil to pupil, the shape of ears, and much more. Maddox said thousands of cases of fraud are found each year. She said sometimes people try to steal someone’s identity, or if they have a bad driving record, they try to go under a new name with a clean driving record. Maddox said there are a lot of matches that are normal because of people changing their names.

Some commenters wanted the Secretary of State to post notices of this face recognition system, but Maddox said they declined because they do not want to advertise how they stop fraud.

Buys said it could help with crime because many undocumented immigrants do not want to talk to police if they do not have a license or insurance.

She said although immigration is dealt with federally, and the state government deals with the licenses, she believes many immigrants may still feel a threat.

Stephens said the title of the inclusive excellence program drew him to the school.

“Most programs at different campuses fail to include underrepresented minorities and it’s welcoming and refreshing,” he said.

There have been major plans in regards to the future of the Center for Inclusive Excellence. The Women’s Center will become a part of the university’s program and also there are plans to relocate to a more accessible location to the third floor of the Student Center.

Since Stephens has gained knowledge and experience with diversity groups at his previous university, his new co-workers seem to believe that he is well equipped for the challenging position.

Paige Gautreaux, a senior studying Accounting from New Iberia, and student employee at the LGBTQ Resource Center said there is hope that Stephens will continue to encourage the resource center’s efforts, such as more opportunities to work with students and safe zone trainings.

Stephens underwent numerous extensive interviews with fellow directors from other programs and chancellor Rita Cheng. The entire interviewing and hiring process took approximately eight weeks.

Juan Cruz Ramirez, former professor and graduate student from Guerrero, Mexico, and assistant for the Hispanic Resource Center, said he is elated for the changes that Stephens is ready to create.

“I think SIU is beginning to understand the need for diversity. We need to function as a whole,” Ramirez said. “This new diversity will really help bring togetherness for us Salukis, because we are representing people all around the world, not just one minority.”

Stephens said he has hopes students can really get involved not just socially, but also academically. The Center for Inclusive Excellence’s goal is to really bring people of all culture and ethnicities together.

“This campus is making sure that students, faculty and staff of all demographics well included and invited,” Stephens said.

Student Health Services promotes clinic

ELIZABETH ZINCHUK
Daily Egyptian

Student Health Services is trying to promote their additional role of helping faculty, and not just students.

In January, Student Health Services opened a Faculty and Staff Convenient Care Clinic with hope of providing accessible, quick care to faculty and staff in order to make it possible for them to go back to work the same day. The clinic is working alongside a new employee wellness initiative called “WELLSIU” put forth by Chancellor Rita Cheng this summer and continuing through its first fall semester.

Ted Grace, director of Student Health Services, said this semester his office has tried to market the Faculty Convenient Care and get the word out. He said after last semester, many faculty and staff still did not know about it and there was not a large turnout.

Grace said the marketing efforts have included setting up a webpage, and setting up information tables and handing out flyers at faculty and staff events and programs. He said mass e-mails, magnets, and mail would continue to be sent out with information about the Faculty and Staff Convenient Care Clinic.

“We want to make sure the faculty and staff know about this,” Grace said. “It emerged from the idea that maybe we can make it easier for people to be seen quickly if they don’t have something real serious and maybe they could even return to work that day.”

While faculty and staff members have been trickling in the clinic to use its services, Grace said he hopes to increase the numbers.

“We haven’t begun to saturate our capacity with this,” Grace said. “It’s not been overwhelmingly busy at all.”

He said the marketing efforts will help with that.

“I have a feeling it will catch on,” Grace said. “A lot of people have told me they have never heard about it and it seems to be well accepted once they do hear about it.”

Right now, Grace said the clinic has been used for student overflow, because of the lack of faculty and staff appointments. With the new clinic, he said student wait time to be seen has not and will not be increased because of the available capacity Student Health Services has to accommodate both groups efficiently.

“We hired an extra provider for this clinic, but we don’t want the extra staff sitting around since there is always an abundance of student appointments,” Grace said. “It doesn’t in any means interfere with access for the students, that’s still our number one mission.”

Beyond the convenient care services, Grace said faculty and staff could use ancillary services such as physical therapy, lab work, and X-rays.

Last semester, Grace said the goal was to get the clinic up and running and hoped the word would get out by word of mouth.

But he did not want to take business away from other community medical facilities.

“We are always sensitive to the fact that we don’t want to compete with community professionals, and we don’t want to take business away from them,” Grace said.

Grace said the Faculty and Staff Convenient Care Clinic is not here to replace faculty and staff’s primary care physicians, but to provide reachable, nearby convenience.

“We have a number of staff that don’t live locally and live in various small communities around southern Illinois,” Grace said. “Surprisingly, with 130 employees, I have very few of them who live in the city of Carbondale.”

Grace said if faculty or staff members needed to be seen by a medical professional and had a commute that went outside of Carbondale, then their only option is often to take a whole day off of work.

“It’s just not feasible,” Grace said. “We’ve had cases where someone has had a relatively minor issue that we can get them in and out and back work.”

Despite the obvious convenience the clinic provides for those whose primary physicians are further away, Grace said any faculty or staff member could benefit from the quick care offered.

“Even if they live in the country, they still have pretty long commutes sometimes,” Grace said. “Anyone can use it.”

Grace said faculty or staff members have to pay a copay at the clinic, but the rest is billed to whatever insurance carrier they have. The pharmacy, on the other hand, does not accept outside insurance, he said, but is still an economical option.

“It’s still economical to go to the pharmacy and lot of the faculty and staff will use it just because many generic prescriptions are under $10,” Grace said. “They’ll often see it as more convenient if it isn’t more than their copay to just pay cash and get the prescription here.”

Grace said thus far, about a third of the faculty have used the pharmacy inside of the Student Health Services building instead of an outside pharmacy.

“We have had some very satisfied, gratified individuals and have gotten some positive comments back saying that it’s working the way we wanted it to,” Grace said. “We’ve had people call, come in, get lab work done, and be out with a prescription with a hour.”

Bob Melton, a building service sub-foreman with the physical plant services department, said he thinks the Faculty and Staff Convenient Care Clinic is a useful option for university employees, but would not be a good option for him because of its limited hours that run from eight a.m. to four-thirty p.m.

“My shift runs from four until midnight, it wouldn’t be convenient for me to go,” Melton said. “It wouldn’t work with my schedule.”

Melton said he thinks the clinic would be used more if it offered more expansive services, such as emergency care.

Wellness Coalition

Grace said the Faculty and Staff Convenient Care Clinic was started in part due to the WELLSIU, an initiative being carried out by the Chancellor’s Office and various other campus departments.

“We’re the clinical side, and they address more of the wellness side through the wellness coalition,” Grace said. “It has really taken off.”

Grace said students benefit from faculty well being as well as the faculty themselves.

“If you can take an environment and make it healthier, everyone benefits,” Grace said. “If students see a professor they admire utilizing our services they are more inclined to pay attention.”

Sally Wright, associate director of programs at the Recreation Center, said her program is putting on a variety of participation and educational programs for WELLSIU to improve the health and wellness of staff and faculty. The eight dimensions this initiative covers is: spiritual, intellectual, occupational, environmental, social, emotional, and financial according to WELLSIU webpage.

Such events have included “Wellness Wednesdays” that take place at noon Wednesdays, Chancellor walks, and bringing in the National Geographic 2012 Adventurer of the Year to do presentations.

As far as why the initiative started, Wright says a healthy workforce is a happier workforce, and SIU is just one of places of work that have enacted such employee initiatives or programs.

“There is a lot of data out there that a healthy workforce is a more productive workforce, a more happy workforce,” Wright said. “There’s fewer sick days taken, there’s more energy, more productivity, so the benefits come back to the organization who support a healthy workforce.”

Wright says she thinks participation will continue to show good prospects.

“Thus far, we’ve had good participation,” Wright said. “We’ve had a really good turnout for the Weight Watchers program we just started and that’s one example.”

Old monorail plan offered solution to parking

STEPHANIE DANNER
Daily Egyptian

Imagine getting to school every day without the worry of snatching a coveted parking spot.

Students might feel this way if a plan made by the SIU Board of Trustees in the 1970s was implemented.

In the ‘70s there was a plan at SIU to build a monorail system to solve the parking issue on campus. The monorail system would allow students to park at a large parking garage, where the towers now stand, and ride a monorail to school.

But, the plan was eventually abandoned.

There are 10,129 decal parking spaces in total for students and faculty to park on campus. The university has sold 9,538 parking decals as of last week, Patti Diggle, coordinator of the SIU parking division said, which leaves 591 spaces without considering the amount of time students and faculty spend in a single spot.

Diggle said school officials made a plan in 2006 to make campus parking more convenient for both students and faculty. According to the 2006 Campus Master Plan, parking structures may be added north of Woody Hall, west of Neckers Hall and west of Rehn Hall in hopes of alleviating parking problems.

The university’s parking system includes mainly peripheral parking lots with some internal lots, Diggle said, which resembles many other universities’ systems. According to the 2006 Campus Master Plan, lots on the perimeters of campus will be expanded.

Commuters now use the perimeter parking lots more because the campus’s parking garage was demolished between the fall 2011 and spring 2012 semesters and other lots changed the decal restrictions, creating a ripple effect of commuters moving to different parking lots around campus, she said. The garage, which was located by the Student Center, was torn down to make room for the university’s new Student Services building, which was the first phase of the new parking plan.

Some students and faculty were not happy with having to find another place to park because of the demolition.

Kishana Williams, a senior in criminology, said she does not think the parking garage should have been torn down, as it was better than the current parking situation.

Williams said the parking garage was a more central location from which students could navigate campus, and now she has to walk much further and has trouble finding parking lots that correspond with her decal.

“I always have trouble finding a parking spot in certain lots and on Wednesday’s. I wouldn’t have to worry about finding a spot, I could just go up there and get on the monorail

Some students are also trying to find campus-parking alternatives because of increased decal prices and space unavailability.

James Noonan, a junior from Rockford studying marketing, said he did not buy a parking sticker this year because of such issues. He said he prefers to take his chances parking along the street.

“Parking stickers are outrageous and I’m going to dodge buying one as long as I can,” he said. “Even if I get one ticket, it’s still less expensive than buying the sticker.”

Noonan’s alternative to buying a sticker is taking chances, but some students have found other options such as the university’s mass transit system. Kevin Arthurs, a senior in automotive technology, said he takes the bus now because of the decal price increase.

Some students, like Arthurs, are trying to take advantage of the university’s transportation options, like the Saluki Express, as an alternative for parking on campus. The Saluki Express has a route that goes around Carbondale to pick up students and is free to all students with their student ID.

The monorail system, like Saluki Express, would have been have been an alternative to parking on campus. Shannon McDonald, a professor in the school of architecture, said the monorail would have been a great addition to the SIU in the ‘70s, but now it is out of date.

“It made sense then, but now there are better things than a monorail,” McDonald said. “Driverless vehicles made with automated vehicle networks that are energy efficient and move from point to point.”

McDonald said she would like to see SIU adopt a more advanced system for solving the parking problem than a monorail, although some students think the prospect of a monorail is inviting.

Kristian Chevalier, a junior from Lebanon in paralegal studies, said a monorail would be easier for her and save time walking to campus.

“It would be useful cause I’m not looking forward to those long walks in the winter time in the snow,” she said.

Chevalier said even though she has a car, she cannot find a place to park and sometimes is forced to resort to meter parking so she can get to class on time. She said something should be done about parking, whether it is a new monorail system or adding more parking spaces in the lots.

Keegan McGee, a sophomore from Marion studying accounting, also agreed the system would be convenient.

“I always have trouble finding a parking spot in certain lots and on Wednesday’s. I wouldn’t have to worry about finding a spot, I could just go up there and get on the monorail,” she said

The reason some students and faculty have difficulty finding places to park is they do not arrive to the university early and they want a parking space next to their building, Diggle said.

THEIR WORD

The shutdown of good governance

FRED HIATT
WASHINGTON POST

If a country proves unable to govern itself, you expect to find a historical explanation. A plague, maybe, or chronic drought, or the rise of a hostile power on its borders.

None of those applies in the present case. To the contrary, by many measures the United States, long blessed, should be entering a new golden age. Who would have predicted 10 years ago that the United States would become, as the Wall Street Journal reported last week, the world's No. 1 energy power — producing more oil and gas combined than Russia or Saudi Arabia? While most developed nations, from Japan to Italy to Russia, do not have enough young people, U.S. population trends are relatively benign thanks to immigration and a stable birth rate.

Yet the government seems unable to do its job. The shutdown can be blamed on the reckless, irresponsible miscalculations of congressional Republicans. But the shutdown is only the most extreme example of government's failure to solve solvable problems: to fix Social Security, pass a budget, reform immigration laws. What gives?

One theory is bad luck: Some analysts suggest that John Boehner, Harry Reid and Barack Obama are a collection of unusually weak leaders, or leaders especially ill-matched in temperament.

A variation on that theme holds that leaders of the previous generation were the aberration: Men (mostly) whose world views were formed in World War II and the Cold War understood the nature of existential threats and were willing to put aside partisan interest for the nation's good. Today's partisanship is just a return to normal.

But maybe even larger trends are at work. Here are a few possible culprits:

Slow growth and inequality. As my colleague Robert Samuelson recently wrote, after World War II Americans became accustomed to 3 percent annual growth, which allowed for a cheerful spreading of the wealth. Now 2 percent may be the new normal, in part because the United States, though its population is younger than that of many countries, still will have more retirees per active worker than in the past.

The growth we do manage is being shared less equally, thanks largely to technology and globalization. The possible result: nastier politics as classes and generations fight over a slower-growing pie.

The great fracturing. Then-Sen. Barack Obama electrified the nation in 2004 with his Democratic convention speech insisting there was no Red America or Blue America. Since then, the divisions have only become more marked. From guns to gay marriage to Obamacare, we seem to live in two separate countries whose inhabitants lack the empathy or even the language to understand each other.

As Americans increasingly choose to live among those with whom they agree politically, in what author Bill Bishop called "the big sort," technology and other factors loosen the ties that bound us into one nation. Other than the occasional, and fleeting, YouTube video, there is no cable television channel or Internet site that we experience in common. Political parties that transcended region have been purged of dissenters and overshadowed by single-focus interest groups.

Immigration and the end of a white majority. "The Mexican migration, and the similarly large migration of others from the rest of Latin America, has in just one generation reshaped the nation," Michael Barone recently wrote. In 1970 there were fewer than 1 million Mexican-born people in the country; today they number more than 12 million, and with their children comprise about 10 percent of the population.

Meanwhile, for the first time, racial and ethnic minorities — if that is still the right word — make up about half of the under-5 population. By 2043, whites will no longer be in the majority. The country seems to have handled the surge in immigration more peaceably than it greeted past waves of newcomers. But the shifts may be causing political shockwaves whose connections to the demographic changes are not immediately obvious.

Inadequate political institutions. There is the affront posed to the principle of one man, one vote by the U.S. Senate, where 600,000 Wyoming residents have as much say as 38 million Californians. In an increasingly self-serving redistricting process, politicians choose their voters instead of the other way around and insulate themselves from challenges by all but the extremes. The frantic money chase drives good people out of politics.

The contrast between the country's relative advantages and its Washington dysfunction is frustrating, but maybe that, too, is part of the problem: In an apparently benign environment, when foreign enemies again seem distant and unthreatening, nothing scares the politicians toward compromise. They manufacture one ginned-up crisis after another, but the deadlines fail to provide the hoped-for jolt toward progress — even when, as now, millions of blameless Americans suffer for politicians' failings.

Will it take a crisis not of their creating to change the dynamic? Let's hope not.

GUEST COLUMN

Now hair this!

ZANE UCKLUND
SENIOR WITH DEGREE
ROCKFORD

I have a beard. A big beard. Over the past nine and a half months I have been cultivating a lovely red face forest that pours off my chin and currently pools slightly beneath my collar bone.

Why grow a beard? A simple answer is who would not want to look awesome if given the choice? Why go around looking like a psuedo-eunuch half man if you do not have to? A whiskered chin is a raw display of animal sexuality. A man without a beard is like a lion without a mane, or a peacock without feathers.

This is not something new. Beards are not a trend or hip fashion statement. Throughout time beards have been associated with wisdom, virility, and masculinity. Rightfully so! These are attributes not meant to be scoffed at.

But there are those among us who sadly (for them) can not grow beards. Some guys faces will always be baby smooth, or they do not realize their shortcomings and cultivate abominations that look more like chaparral than facial hair. These unfortunate souls should be pitied like a child with polio or someone entombed in an iron lung.

Not having a beard does not make someone a bad person, it just means there is room for improvement. However, you should know bearding is not all fun and games. Growing takes patience and dedication. Even if you are a beast among beasts your beard will not come in overnight, and once your face sprouts the work has only begun. A dedicated bearder needs an array of specialized balms, shampoos, and grooming tools to look their best. Any aspiring bearder who does not want to maintain their growth properly is not worth their weight in moustache wax.

Another downside of bearding is when one gets large enough it can get cumbersome. On occasion mine has been known to get caught in zippers. A friend of mine who had cultivated a fine specimen ultimately decided to euthanize his face friend because his newborn son would not stop rugging it.

You will also have to learn to eat with a beard. Ice cream cones are especially tricky, and the newly bearded will learn to carry combs to eliminate inevitable crumb accumulation lest they risk embarrassment.

In conclusion, I am a proud pogonotrophist (for the unenlightened, pogonotrophy is a ten cent word for growing a beard). For more information on bearding I recommend the Beard Team USA website <http://beardteamusa.org>, and www.beards.org. I also suggest watching the seminal show on bearding Whisker Wars. Or if you are lucky enough to encounter a hirsute individual during your daily affairs, just approach them with any questions you have. I guarantee they will be only too happy to discuss their follicle achievements.

Japan Airlines makes first buy

JOSHUA FREED
YURI KAGEYAMA
Associated Press

TOKYO — Usually when Japanese airlines need to buy a big plane, they go to Boeing. Not this time.

Japan Airlines ordered its first Airbus jets on Monday. It's buying 31 A350s, the European plane maker's new long-range, fuel-efficient jet. JAL also has an option to buy 25 more Airbus planes.

Monday's deal is the first for the A350 in Japan and marks a big change in policy for JAL. Boeing had been the airline's major supplier for decades and has dominated Japan's aviation market for decades.

"If there's one place Boeing could have regarded as a secure market, it was Japan," said aerospace consultant Richard Aboulafia of the Teal Group.

The order is worth 950 billion yen ($9.5 billion) at list prices, although discounts are common. Some analysts even think that JAL may be getting the planes for below cost as Airbus looks to make inroads in “Although we are disappointed with the selection, we will continue to provide the most efficient and innovative products and services that meet longer-term fleet requirements for Japan Airlines.

— Boeing statement

Boeing's domain.

The U.S. and Japan have been big trading partners since the end of World War II. And to strengthen its ties with Japanese airlines, Chicago-based Boeing has been shifting more and more work over the years to Japanese suppliers. About one-third of its new 787 is built in Japan.

Choosing suppliers that give Boeing "a market access advantage" is an "important consideration," said Kent Fisher, Boeing's supply chain chief, at a presentation in May. "We're not going to shy away from that. That is an issue that we consider in the process, but it's not the only issue."

Boeing will have the right planes to compete with the A350, but it's taking too long to finalize their designs so they can book firm orders, Aboulafia said. It plans updates for its large, long-haul 777 as well as a longer version of its new long-range 787, but neither design has been finalized to a point where Boeing can take orders.

Customers are not waiting. "If this isn't a wake-up call, why not just stay in bed, because you've just been hitting the snooze button over and over again," Aboulafia said.

JAL and Japan's other big airline, All Nippon Airways, both had to wait through long delays before Boeing delivered 787s in 2011. More 787s fly with Japanese airlines than anywhere else, so the impact of the 787's grounding for battery problems this year was worst for the Japanese airlines.

But JAL President Yoshiharu Ueki said the grounding wasn't a factor in buying the Airbus plane. He repeatedly said the long-range, twin-engine wide-body A350 was chosen because it was the "best match for our needs."

Although ANA flies some smaller Airbus planes, the long-haul fleets at both airlines have been Boeing-only. Airbus has been eager to break into the Japanese market.

Will Horton, senior analyst at CAPA Centre for Aviation, thinks JAL likely got a good discount from Airbus, perhaps buying the planes at cost, or below.

JAL has wanted an aircraft like the A350, which is smaller than Boeing's 747 jumbo jets but slightly bigger than the 787, Horton said.

The new A350s are due to arrive in 2019. Ueki declined to give the specific flight routes where these jets will be used, but said they will basically take over the routes of retiring 777s.

Boeing said Monday's deal did not hurt its relationship with JAL.

"Although we are disappointed with the selection, we will continue to provide the most efficient and innovative products and services that meet longer-term fleet requirements for Japan Airlines," it said in a statement. "We have built a strong relationship with Japan Airlines over the last 50 years and we look to continue our partnership going forward."

JAL is a special kind of carrier in Japan because of its close ties with the government. But Ueki said JAL did not consult the government or other parties in making its decision.

JAL fell into bankruptcy three years ago. It emerged last year in one of the biggest IPOs in Japanese history following a government bailout and a wide-ranging restructuring.

The carrier was long the symbol of Japan's economic rise. However, in recent decades, it was hobbled by a bloated workforce, unpopular routes and safety lapses.

Wave of deadly attacks in Egypt kills eight

HAMZA HENDAWI
MAGGIE MICHAEL
Associated Press

CAIRO — A drive-by shooting killed six Egyptian soldiers east of Cairo on Monday, shortly after a massive explosion, possibly from a car bomb, hit the security headquarters in a town near the area's tourist resorts in southern Sinai, killing at least two and wounding dozens.

Also Monday, at least two rocket propelled grenades slammed into a compound housing the country's major satellite earth station in a southern Cairo suburb, security officials said.

The attacks came a day after dozens were killed when holiday celebrations marking the start of the 1973 Mideast war turned into deadly clashes across Egypt, though it was not immediately clear if Monday's violence was related.

The dawn attack on the earth station in the leafy suburb of Maadi in Cairo caused only minor damage to one of the giant satellite dishes in the complex. But its significance was far wider, in part because it struck at the heart of the nation's telecommunications center, making it the most serious attack in the capital since last month's assassination attempt against the country's interior minister outside his home in eastern Cairo.

The officials said the six soldiers were on patrol in a pickup truck when masked gunmen in another vehicle opened fire at them in an area west of the Suez Canal city of Ismailia. The six included an officer, a lieutenant, said the officials, speaking on condition of anonymity because they were not authorized to talk to the media.

The explosion at the security headquarter in the town of el-Tor killed two people and wounded nearly 50, signaling what could be the spread of attacks by Islamic militants, already active in northern Sinai. Daily attacks against security forces in the volatile northern Sinai Peninsula have increasingly resembled a full-fledged insurgency. But the region of southern Sinai, which includes the popular diving resort of Sharm el-Sheikh, has been mostly quiet since a series of deadly attacks in 2005 and 2006.

The four-story building sustained serious damage and the officials said the blast was likely caused by a car bomb detonated by remote control.

Monday's attacks come a day after at least 51 people were killed in clashes between security forces and supporters of ousted Islamist president Mohammed Morsi across much of Egypt.

At least 40 of those killed were in Cairo, where some neighborhoods saw hours of pitched street battles between police and protesters. The fighting left streets looking like combat zones, with fires burning, black smoke rising and the air thick with tear gas.

Sunday's death toll and Monday's attacks constituted the latest chapter in the turmoil roiling Egypt since the ousting in February 2011 of autocrat Hosni Mubarak.

The latest violence is certain to set back efforts by the interim, military-backed government to revive the economy, especially the vital tourism sector, and bring order to the streets of Cairo, where crime and lawlessness have been rife.

Morsi was Egypt's first civilian and first freely elected president, succeeding four since the early 1950s who hailed from a military background. But after a year in office, Morsi was faced by massive protests demanding his ouster, accusing his Muslim Brotherhood of taking over power — and on July 3, military chief Gen. Abdel-Fattah el-Sissi removed him.

The military is now back as the real source of power in Egypt, and state and independent media have been depicting it as the country's savior — with growing calls for el-Sissi to run in the presidential election due early next year.

Stocks fall as government shutdown drags onward

STEVE ROTHWELL
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Investors sent the Standard & Poor's 500 index to its lowest close in a month Monday as few signs emerged of a deal to end the U.S. government shutdown and raise the nation's borrowing limit.

Senate Democrats moved to introduce legislation to raise the nation's debt limit without the unrelated conditions Republicans have said they are seeking. The White House signaled it would accept even a brief extension in borrowing authority to prevent an unprecedented default by the United States.

On Sunday, speaker John Boehner had ruled out a vote in the House of Representatives on a straightforward bill to increase the government's borrowing without concessions from President Barack Obama.

Lawmakers have until Oct. 17 to reach a deal on increasing the nation's debt ceiling. Failure to strike a deal could cause the United States to miss payments on its debt. The Treasury warned last week that a default could push the economy into a downturn even worse than the Great Recession.

"Everything now is predicated on Washington," said Quincy Krosby, market strategist for Prudential. "That is what the market is focused on completely, getting a deal done to avoid a default."

The Standard & Poor's 500 index dropped 14.38 points, or 0.9 percent, to 1,676.12. The Dow Jones industrial average dropped 136.34 points, or 0.9 percent, to 14,936.24. The Nasdaq composite fell 37.38 points, or 1 percent, to 3,770.38.

The losses were broad. Nine of the 10 industry groups in the S&P 500 dropped. Phone companies were the only sector to advance.

Until now, the stock market has mostly moved sideways since the shutdown began at the start of the month, indicating that investors still expect lawmakers to come up with a deal. The S&P 500 is down 0.3 percent in October.

In government bond trading, the yield on the 10-year Treasury note fell to 2.63 percent from 2.65 percent. The yield has fallen close to its lowest in two months. Investors have bought Treasuries on concern that U.S. economic growth will slow as the budget impasse drags on.

There were also other signs that investors are getting gradually more nervous about the debt ceiling deadline.

The VIX index, which rises when investors are getting more concerned about stock fluctuations, rose to its highest in more than three months.

The dollar fell against the euro and the Japanese yen. The dollar index, which measures the strength of the dollar against other currencies, fell for the seventh day in nine. The gauge is close to its lowest since February.

One of the reasons stocks haven't fallen more is that some investors see the current stall as a blip rather than a change in the long-term trend. The Federal Reserve continues to keep up its unprecedented stimulus of the economy, a strategy that has helped support a four-year surge in stocks.

The stock market climbed to record levels in September after the Fed said it would keep buying $85 billion of bonds a month to support the U.S. economy. Many investors had expected the central bank to start reducing its stimulus.

Minutes from the September meeting will be published Wednesday, giving investors insight into the central bank's thinking.

Bernie: Friday was Cardinals’ turn to look awful

BERNIE MIKLASZ
St. Louis Post-Dispatch (MCT)

ST. LOUIS — Usually when we look at rival teams, we go heavy on the clichés. We say something like, “The Cardinals and Pirates bring out the best in each other” and talk about how special their games are. Oh, please.

These teams bring out the worst in each other.

The Pirates and Cardinals take turns putting on the clown shoes and fright wigs and racing around the field in those little beeping, honking cars that go around in endless circles. High jinks ensue, guys start stumbling and slipping all over the place.

Truth is, it has been pretty bad entertainment. Most of their games this season have been blowouts.

One team looks like the 1927 New York Yankees and makes the other resemble the hopelessly impoverished and overmatched St. Louis Browns.

The National League division series is playing out the same way so far.

The Cardinals slapped the Pirates around 9-1 on Thursday in Game 1. The Pirates won Game 2 on Friday, romping to a 7-1 victory. It was the Cardinals’ day to put on the bulbous red noses, sad-eye makeup and garish polka-dot suits.

Losing Cardinals’ starter Lance Lynn was terrible, and in three career postseason starts he’s now 0-2 with a

“It’s important, there’s no doubt. You get in these scenarios and you lose (the first) two games, that’s a tough hole to dig out of. We wanted to get a game — we got a game. And now we’re getting back to our house, which has been a good place for us to play.”

— Clint Hurdle manager

6.94 ERA. Manager Mike Matheny made the call to start Lynn in Game 2 over rookie Shelby Miller, who had the most wins and lowest ERA of any Cardinal starter at Busch Stadium this season.

Matheny is taking heat for the decision, which is curious considering that (A) Lynn had also pitched well at Busch this season; (B) the Cardinals’ defense was embarrassingly messy Friday; (C) their hitters were dominated by rookie Pittsburgh pitcher Gerrit Cole in his first career postseason start.

Hey, but if you want to make this all about Matheny and Lynn, please do. Go ahead and give the other Cardinals free pass for playing such lousy ball in Game 2. There are always plenty of good seats available in the Short Attention Span Theater, so come on down. There are prime seats in the “It’s All on Matheny” section, and I believe we can get you in the second row of the “It’s All on Lynn” mezzanine.

All I know is this: As bad as the Pirates were in Game 1, the Cardinals matched it in Game 2. And there’s plenty of blame to go around.

“The Pirates weren’t happy last night and we’re not happy tonight,” Cardinals third baseman David Freese said. “That’s what playoff baseball is all about.”

I don’t understand the extreme swings in the Pirates-Cardinals clashes this season. They have now played 21 times in 2013. In their 11 wins the Pirates have outscored the Cardinals by an average 5.6 runs. In their 10 wins, the Cards have outscored the Bucs by an average of 5.6 runs.

And these are two very good teams, so I do not know why they cannot play good baseball on the same field for nine innings. We have seen only glimpses and highlights of elite performances. Cardinals Carlos Beltran and Adam Wainwright in Game 1. Pirates Cole and Pedro Alvarez in Game 2.

The Pirates were sloppy in the first game, and the Cardinals could not catch the ball, do anything with the bat, or get a big pitch from Lynn in Friday’s fall-down.

That is what is so frustrating. The home team had the chance to seize control of the NLDS but played poorly and let the Pirates get out of town with a 1-1 series tie. That is a successful trip for the Pirates, who get to play Games 3 and 4 at home.

“It’s important, there’s no doubt,” manager Clint Hurdle said. “You get in these scenarios and you lose (the first) two games, that’s a tough hole to dig out of. We wanted to get a game — we got a game.

“And now we’re getting back to our house, which has been a good place for us to play.”

The Cardinals are in a jam here. If they lose both games in Pittsburgh, their season is over.

(I know, I know ... if the Cardinals win both games in Pittsburgh, the Pirates’ season is over. That can happen, too. But the Cardinals would be bucking the odds; after all, they went 3-7 at PNC Park this season and were outscored 39 to 8 in the seven losses. But yes, it can happen.)

To attain a split of the first two games Sunday-Monday at PNC Park, the Cardinals have a few important things to pull off.

They will have to find a way to demystify Pirates lefthanded starter Francisco Liriano in Game 3. He’s owned them this season, going 3-0 with an 0.75 ERA and limiting STL to a .127 batting average.

If the Cardinals cannot shake themselves from Liriano’s hold, they’ll have to try and bully Pirates Game 4 starter Charlie Morton.

The Cardinals need big-time starts from two young pitchers, Joe Kelly in Game 3 and Michael Wacha in Game 4. They have never started an MLB postseason game. Can they deliver as Cole did for the Pirates?

If the Cardinals lose Game 3, it will put a lot on Wacha to ask him to possibly save the season in Game 4. Wacha has abundant talent and poise, but he’s a rookie with only 64 2/3 big-league innings. Cole had 118 innings for the Pirates this season.

“We’re going to go to their house and there’s no doubt about that, they’ve been able to play good games over there against us,” Beltran said. “But we have to stick with our plan, and hopefully go there and score early. And we have confidence in the guys we have on the mound.”

This will be a fascinating trip to Pittsburgh. Now that the Cardinals and Pirates are finished kicking each other around in the first two games, I think the real drama is about to kick in.

The Cardinals will be coming home. We just do not know if it will be for Game 5, or to prepare for the NL championship series, or to begin a harsh and restless offseason.

Road to Miami may wind through Sioux Falls

JOSEPH GOODMAN
The Miami Herald (MCT)

PARADISE ISLAND, Bahamas — As Pat Delany checked out of his luxury hotel room on a small island in the Bahamas on Friday, he glanced at the Weather Channel one last time and smiled. The ticker on the bottom of his TV warned of a potential snowstorm in South Dakota.

He will be there soon enough.

Previously a scout for the Heat, Delany was promoted this offseason to a new position within the organization. He is now the coach of the Sioux Falls Skyforce, a team in the NBA Development League, or, D-League, which is the official minor league for the NBA. The Heat and the Skyforce entered into an exclusive partnership this offseason in order to better develop young players and coaches, and also to improve the Heat’s scouting footprint. The Skyforce’s season begins Nov. 22, and the Heat’s front office is excited about the potential of its new investment.

“It’s a win on all different levels,” said Andy Elisburg, the Heat’s newly appointed general manager who has long been one of Pat Riley’s key advisers.

The D-League consists of 17 teams, and this season 14 of those teams will have one-on-one affiliations with an NBA team similar to the Heat’s relationship with Sioux Falls. Once mostly an afterthought, the D-League slowly has developed into a legitimate proving ground for coaches, players and even referees who have dreams of making it to the NBA.

The new financial reality of the NBA also has had a trickle-down effect on the D-League’s growing significance. As NBA teams prepare for a future with a stricter salary cap, it only makes sense to bolster the means by which to develop players from the ground up.

Danny Green, the San Antonio Spurs guard who shot so well against the Heat in the NBA Finals, honed his skills in the D-League. Cleveland Cavaliers swingman Alonzo Gee of Riviera Beach also got his professional start in the D-League. On the coaching side, the Memphis Grizzlies’ new coach, David Joerger, first made a name for himself in the D-League.

“It’s a chance of a lifetime to get head coaching experience at this level,” said Delany, a 33-year-old who _ similar to current Heat coach Erik Spoelstra _ started as a video intern with Miami. “I’m forever grateful for this opportunity that the Heat has given me.”

Of the 14 one-on-one affiliations between NBA and D-League franchises, none presents such an odd geographical marriage as the Heat and Skyforce. This season, a developing player on the end of the Heat’s bench could be in tropical Miami one day, and then be sent to snowbound Sioux Falls the next. There are several players participating in the Heat’s training camp who could be grinding away in

“It’s a chance of a lifetime to get head coaching experience at this level. I’m forever grateful for this opportunity that the Heat has given me.”

— Pat Delany
head coach

Sioux Falls very soon.

OFF TO SIOUX FALLS?

Justin Hamilton, Eric Griffin, Charlie Westbrook and Jarvis Varnado are fighting for one of the final spots on the Heat’s 15-man roster, but whoever makes the team could be sent to Sioux Falls for playing time and development in the D-League.

Coaching those players will be Delany and his small staff, which includes former Heat scout Octavio De La Grana, already a coaching legend in South Florida circles, and Sean Rooks, a former player who has been an assistant in the D-League and NBA.

De La Grana, who is beginning his seventh season with the Heat, got his start with Miami Florida Christian High School. Rooks already has spent time in Sioux Falls as an assistant and last year was on Alvin Gentry’s staff in Phoenix.

“I think we’re all kind of eager to get up there and get started,” Delany said.

Behind the scenes in Sioux Falls, Miami and on the road will be Adam Simon, who recently was named the Heat’s assistant general manager/general manager Sioux Falls Skyforce. Previously, Simon was the Heat’s director of player personnel. In addition to scouting for the Heat, it will be Simon’s job to identify players for the D-League draft and also become an expert on all of the D-League’s financial structures.

The first order of business will be identifying three designated affiliate players for the Skyforce’s roster. Players who do not make the Heat’s final 15-man roster are the most likely candidates to be designated. Of course, simply earmarking someone as an “affiliate player” does not necessarily mean that person will join the Skyforce. Those players could go to Europe for more money.

“It’s a question that every player has to think about, every agent,” Simon said. “They’re sacrificing money to go overseas, but they all have dreams and the dreams are to play in the NBA.”

All contracts for the Skyforce are through the D-League, and the bottom line is no one will be getting rich playing in Sioux Falls. There are three salary tiers: $25,000, $21,000 and $15,000, with a total annual budget of $172,000 for the entire team. Only a certain number of top salaries are awarded for each team, but the Skyforce can go over budget. And that is where the Heat comes in. Miami will be on the hook for anything over

ROAD TO NBA

Hamilton, a former Heat second-round draft pick, played in Croatia last year but might consider going to Sioux Falls this season if he does not make the Heat’s final 15-man roster. Hamilton had a mixed experience in Europe. Although he enjoyed living in Croatia, the team he played for did not pay him and he also tore his hamstring.

“I’ve talked to guys who have played overseas and played in the D-League who are trying to break in, and I heard the D-League route just gives you more of the NBA terminology, and you play here in the States, so it’s easier for teams see you,” Hamilton said.

Basically, the players who choose the D-League route are playing for 10-day call-ups. The minimum salary for rookies in the NBA is $490,000.

“It’s more about developing staff, developing coaches and developing our players that we send there,” Simon said. “And we’re going to get a better feel for the D-League and any players we’re going to potentially call up. We’ll have first-hand knowledge of them because of our coaching staff seeing them, whether they are on our team or other teams.”

Evening the playing field

LEWIS MARIEN | DAILY EGYPTIAN

Construction workers apply new artificial turf Monday at Richard “Itchy” Jones Stadium. The new turf is part of a $4 million project to renovate the baseball stadium, which includes new dugouts, lights, bleachers, and a press box. Renovations are scheduled for completion before the upcoming baseball season.

D.E. Weekly Bark

The NBA season is right around the corner and plenty of teams have improved their roster either through free agency, trades, or the NBA draft. There are plenty of sleeper teams who could make a splash come playoff season. Which team who did not make the playoffs last season has a shot at reaching the postseason this year?

Tyler Dixon

I think the surprise team this NBA season is the Minnesota Timberwolves. Injuries have hurt them the last few seasons, but if they can get everyone healthy, they will be a force to be reckoned with. Kevin Love is a dominant post player and Ricky Rubio is a solid point guard. Other good young players like Derek Williams and freshman Shabazz Muhammad give them size and length at the wings. If not this year then in the next few years the Timberwolves will be vying for a playoff spot in the Western Conference.

The Cleveland Cavs have a legitimate shot at making the playoffs this year. Kyrie Irving is a superstar and the addition of backup point guard Jarrett Jack will improve their depth in the backcourt. They also drafted UNLV forward Anthony Bennett with the first overall pick in this year’s draft. The biggest question mark is the free agent acquisition of big man Andrew Bynum. Bynum is coming off a season in which he did not play one game because of multiple knee injuries. If his knees can hold up throughout the year, look for the Cavs to have a breakout season.

Terrance Peacock

Aaron Graff

The New Orleans Pelicans, formerly the Hornets, are the sleeper team to look out for this year. Not only are some of their key components getting healthier, but they also brought in Jrue Holiday and Tyreke Evans who can give them consistent quality point guard play. They have an easier schedule for the first month of the season, and that momentum will carry them to the playoffs. Nobody on the team is even in their 30s yet, so look out for this team for years to come.

For the 2014 playoffs, I think the Dallas Mavericks will make it this year. Dirk Nowitzki is obviously their “go to” player on the team, but they are bringing in some young newcomers. I know it is always interesting to watch what the new players on the team will do. However, there are a substantial amount of older guys who have been playing the game for a while; such as Monte Ellis, Vince Carter, and Shawn Marion who are all still capable of keeping up with some of the younger guys.

Salukis battle through minor setbacks

SYMONE WOOLRIDGE
Daily Egyptian

Competing in their third consecutive competition of the season, the Saluki women traveled to St. Louis for their toughest battle thus far.

During the three-day Missouri Valley Conference Individual Championship, junior Natasha Tomishima and senior Korey Love ended their Sunday with a flight No. 1 doubles championship win defeating Wichita State 8-5.

Tomishima and Love have had different doubles partners in previous competitions. But during the MVC matches, the women began to get the feel for each other.

“At first I wasn’t sure about us working together just because I know we are alike in many ways,” Tomishima said. “It was awesome for us to pull out a win and to know we both battled through it.”

Tomishima missed the first tournament due to an illness. She said she is still experiencing some issues, but has pushed herself to compete as hard as she possibly can.

“I was feeling extremely sick but I kept pushing myself,” she said. “Every match I played I wasn’t sure if I was going to win but I was sure I was going to fight.”

After a drawn out three-hour singles match, Tomishima immediately began her doubles match with her teammate Love.

“It was a big fight, I can’t even describe the feeling,” Tomishima said. “I was just so tired, but knowing we came out with the win is great.”

Head Coach Audra Anderson said Tomishima and Love stepped up for the team.

“They played big when we needed them to and won some big matches,” Anderson said in a Saluki Athletics press release. “For them it was about playing the crucial points well.”

Love has also been competing through an injury. Love has patellar tracking disorder, where the kneecap shifts out of place as the leg bends or straightens. This makes it even harder for Love to compete to her full potential.

“There is a bad burning sensation in my knee,” Love said. “A week ago I couldn’t play both singles and doubles so it was kind of a stretch to even play doubles this weekend.”

Love was taken out of singles matches during the weekend, but successfully battled with Tomishima. In each of the three doubles matches, the doubles tandem began their battle in the losing position.

“We started off losing every time, but we just battled ourselves back up to play hard like we know we can,” Love said.

Love said she and Tomishima connects as a team on and off of the court.

“I think we work really well together because we’re both kind of feisty,” Love said. “She is just a bundle of energy and I’m really vocal when I play so we bring out the best of each other.”

This is Love’s last year playing SIU tennis and her personal goals are to get healthy and end the year with an MVC Championship win.

Senior Anita Lee also ended her MVC weekend with a successful win. Lee defeated Ariel Dechter of Bradley 7-5, 6-4 to take home a flight No. 2 singles championship.

“I was a little nervous because it is my senior year and we were hit with tough competition,” Lee said. “But I was excited and pulled it out for a good win for my last fall season.”

Anderson said Lee did a great job and consistently stayed in control.

“She was always in control of her matches,” Anderson said. “She was able to keep calm and play big when she needed to.”

Lee said her teammates have played a huge role in her game by constantly cheering her on and giving her confidence.

“My teammates are always supporting each other and cheering for each other and that helps a lot,” Lee said.

Tomishima also said her teammates have made her a tougher competitor as she competes after her illness.

“Even though I felt really sick in my matches, my teammates encourage me so much that I just want to push myself even harder,” Tomishima said.

The Saluki women will compete in a five-day Intercollegiate Tennis Association Regional Championship in Oklahoma beginning Oct. 17.
